

DAISY THE DANCING DUCK

A StorySprout Press Book

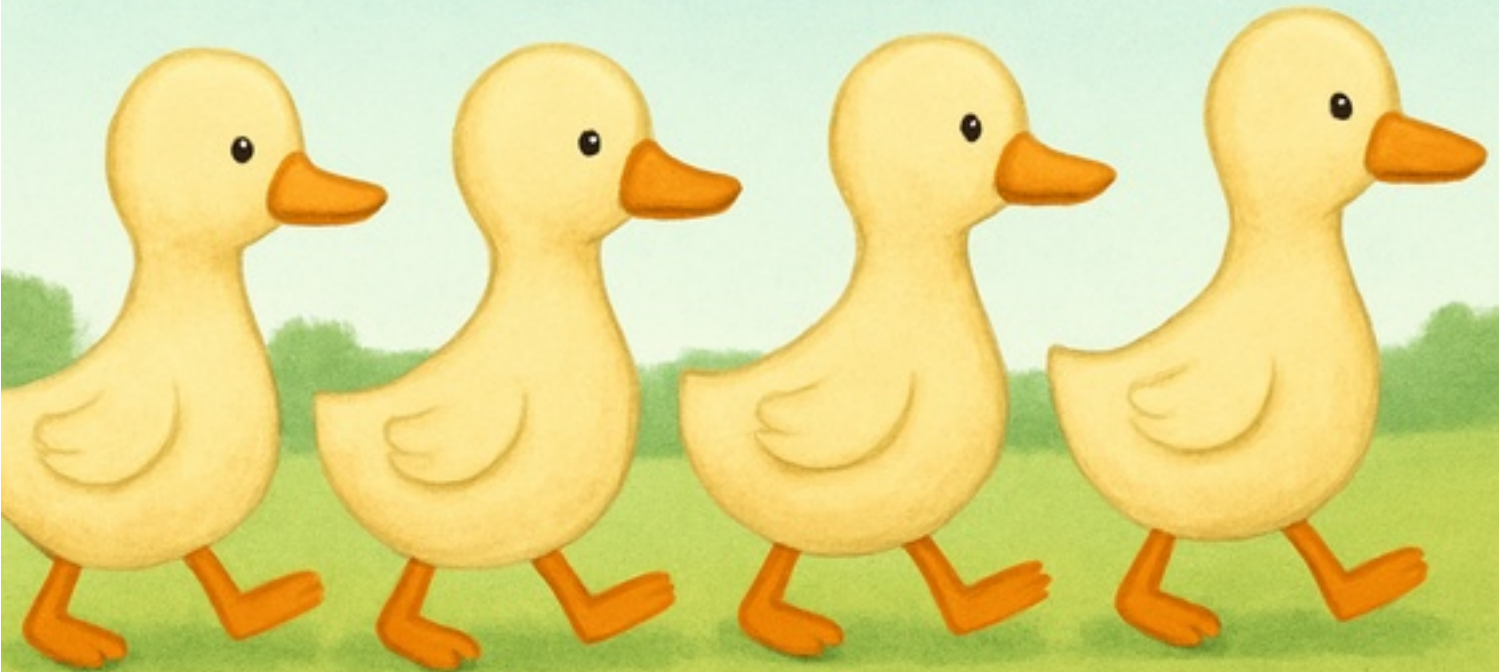

DAISY THE DANCING DUCK

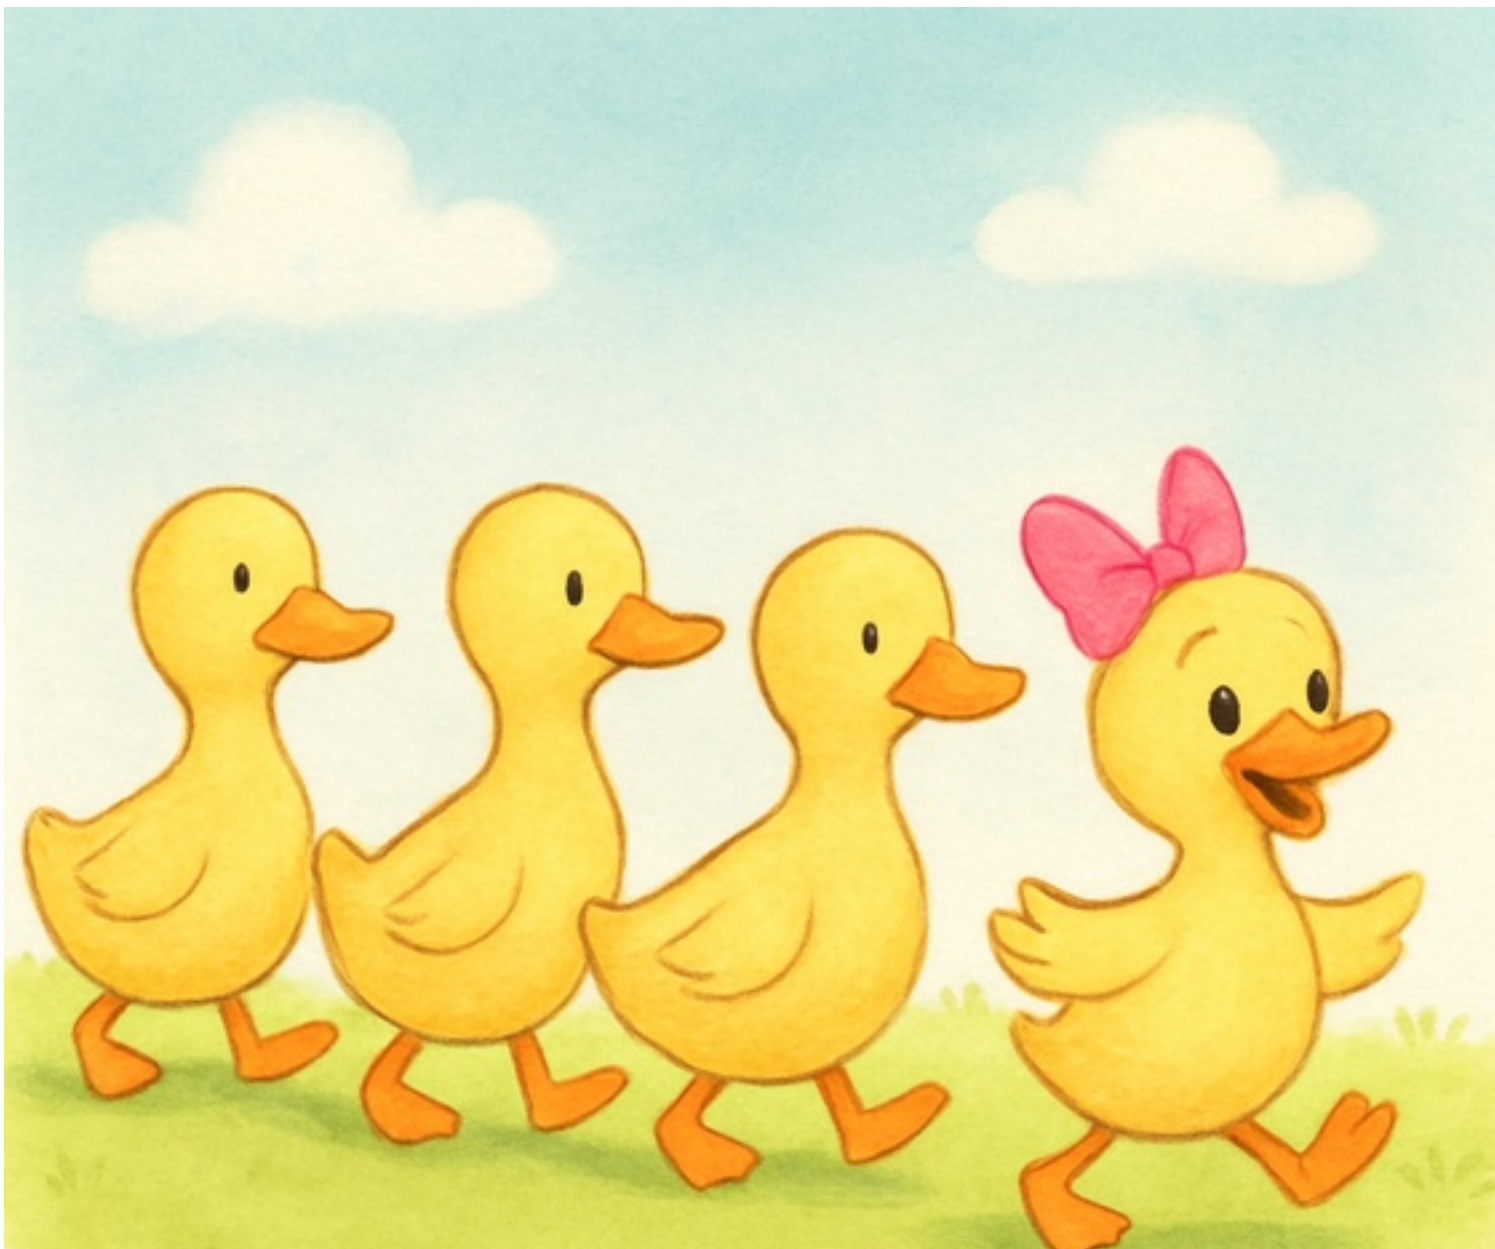

Down at the Willow Pond, the morning started just like any other.

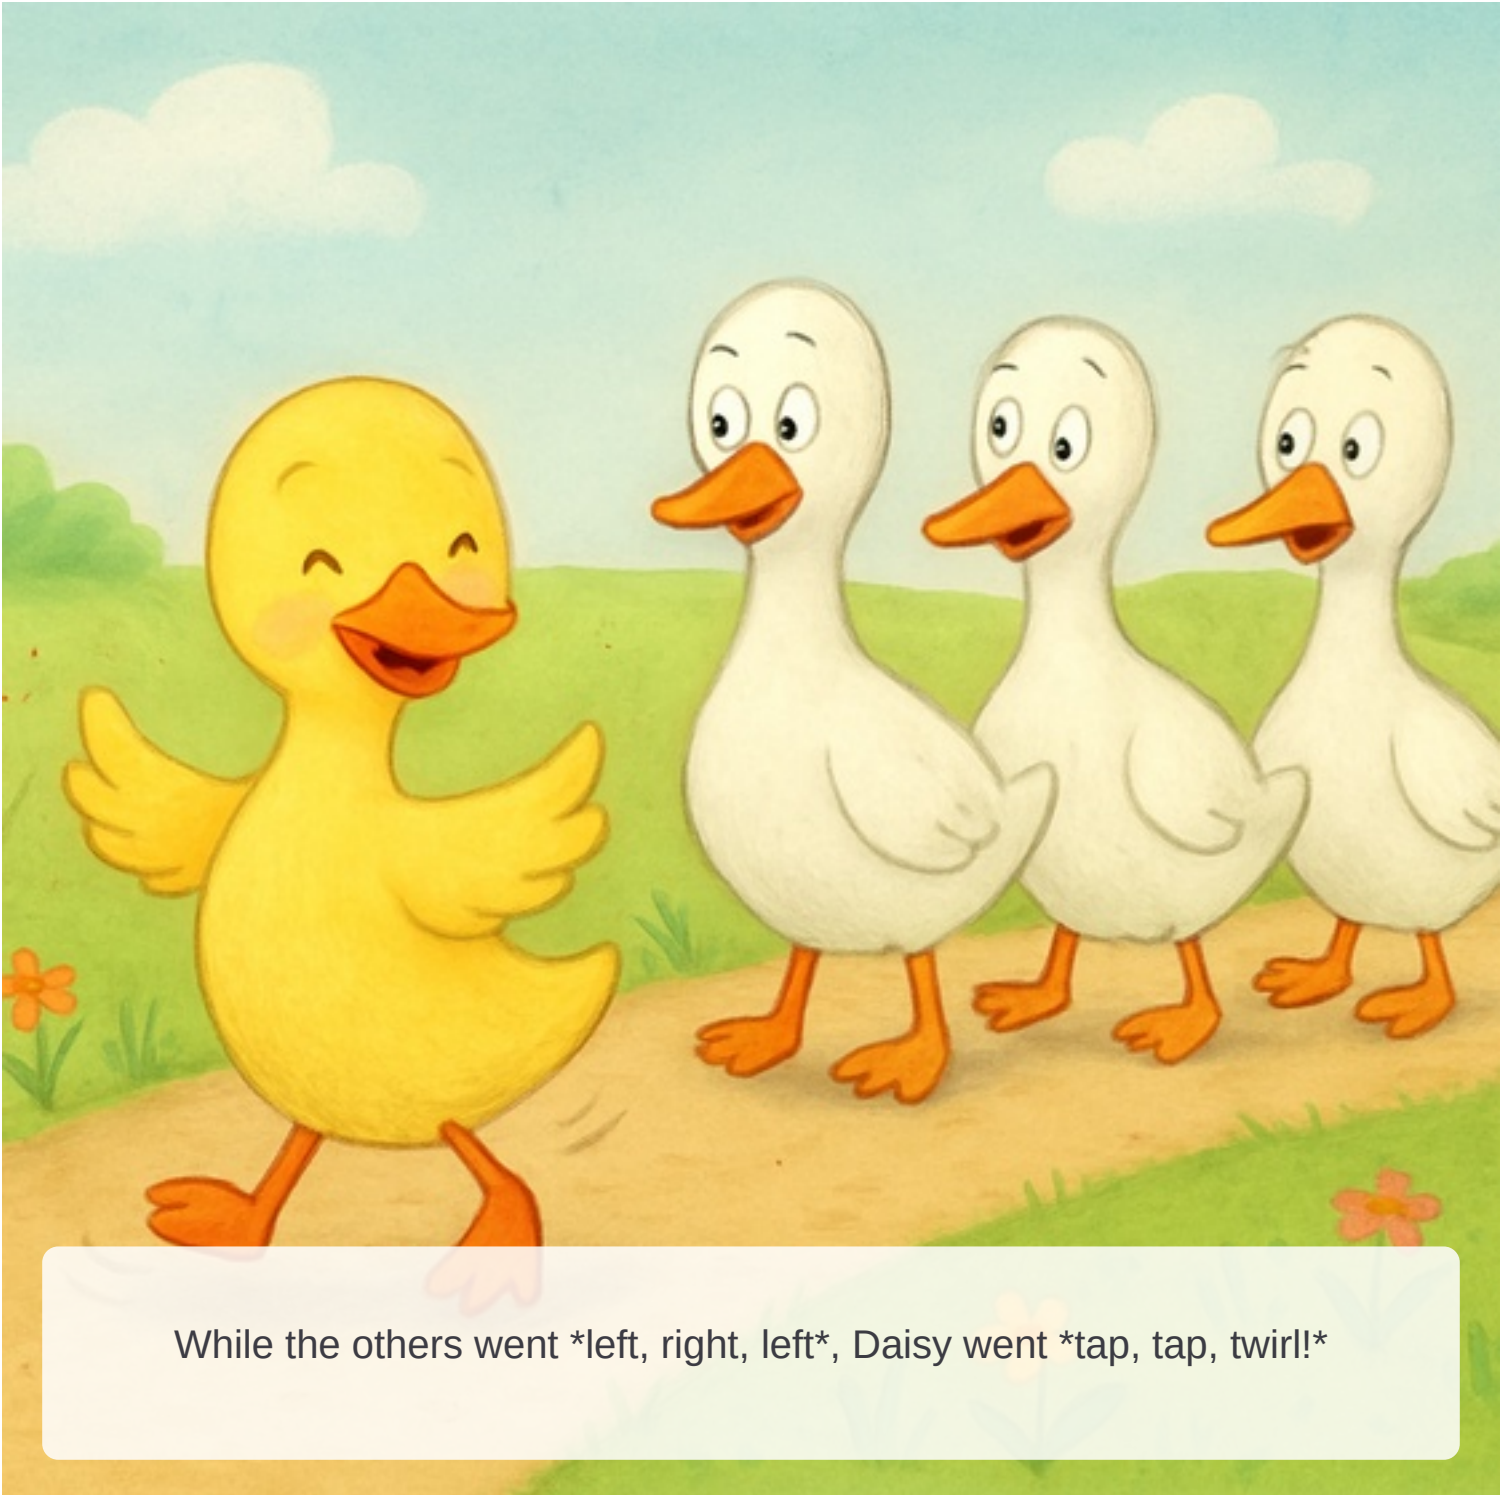

DAISY THE DANCING DUCK

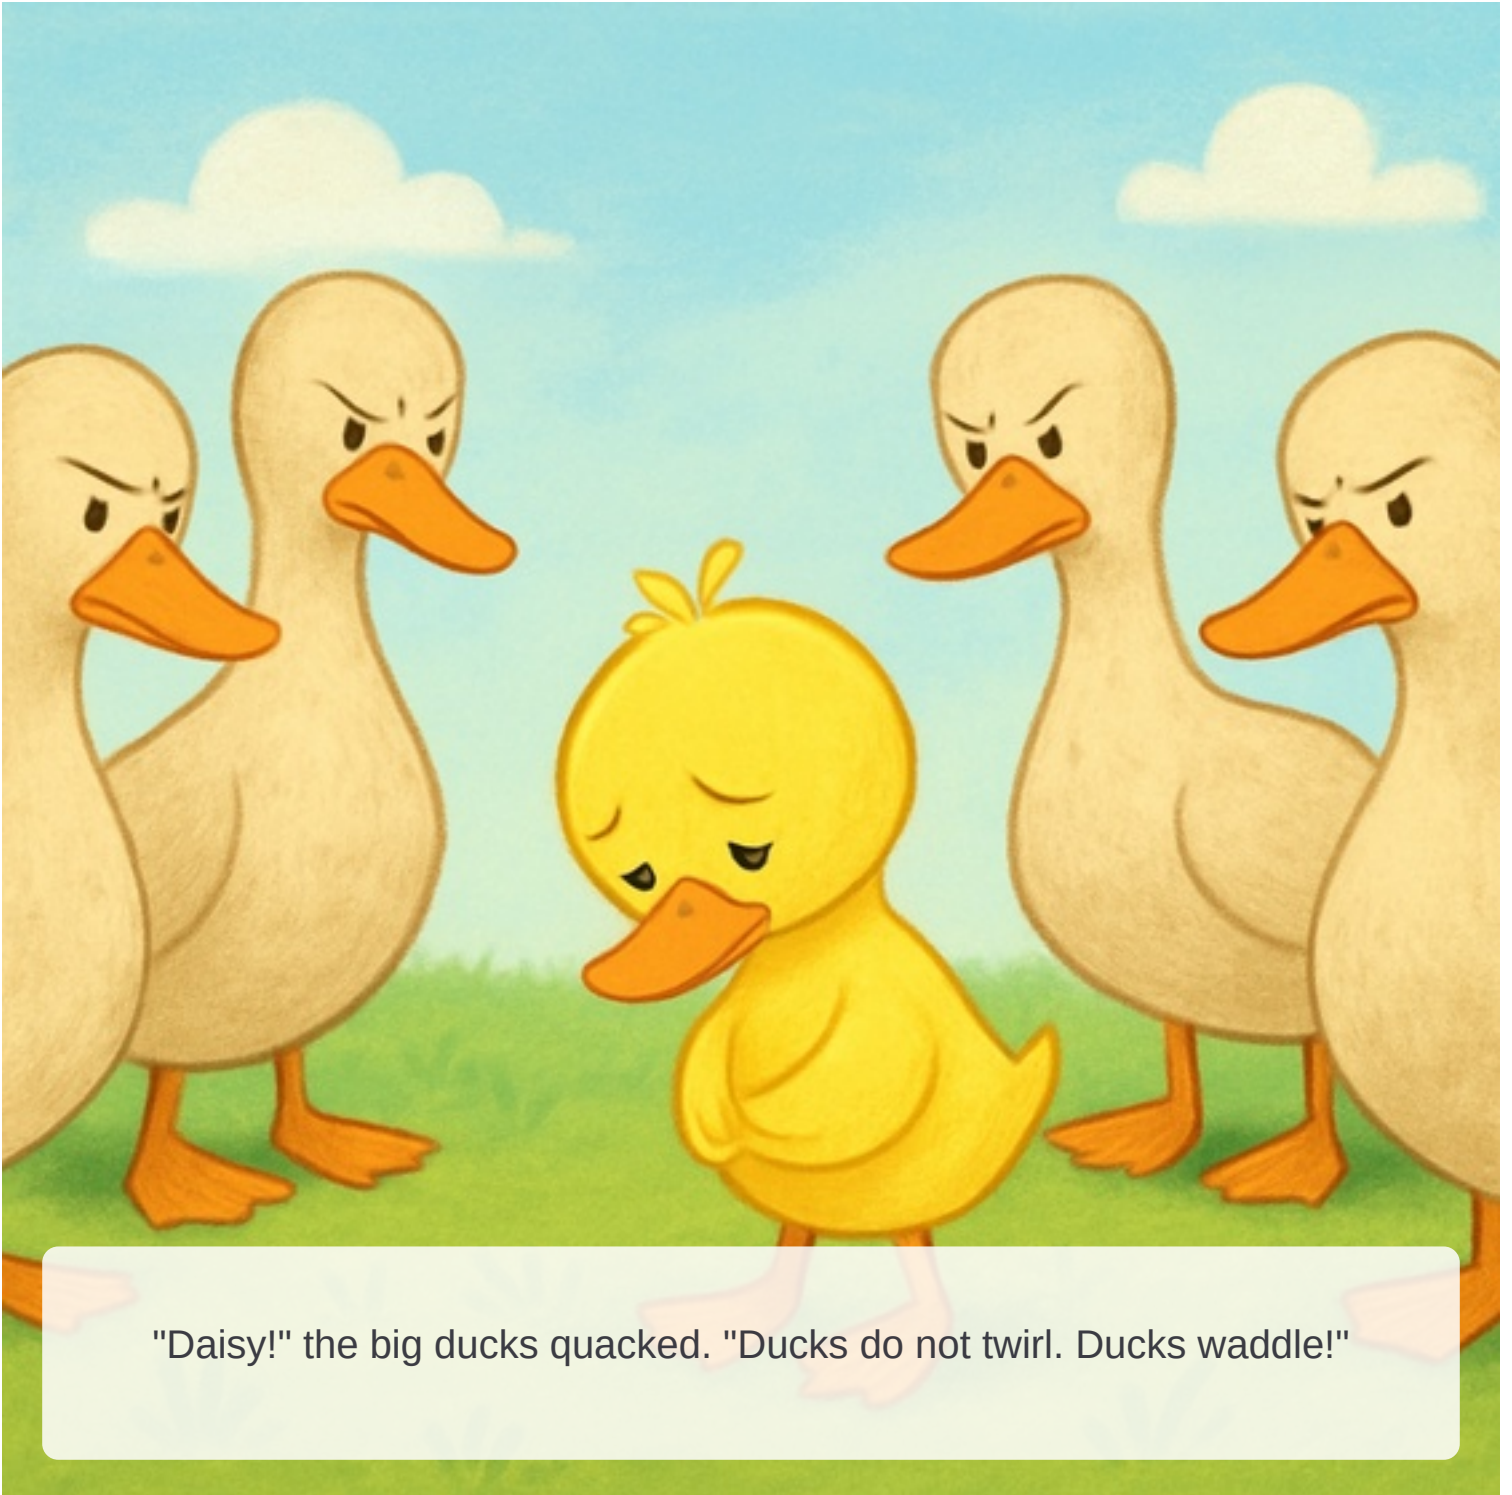

All the ducks lined up for their morning walk. Waddle, waddle, waddle.

But Daisy didn't want to waddle. Daisy had a secret. In her heart, she wanted to dance!

While the others went left, right, left, Daisy went tap, tap, twirl!

"Daisy!" the big ducks quacked. "Ducks do not twirl. Ducks waddle!"

Daisy tried to be a good duck. She tried to waddle just like everyone else.

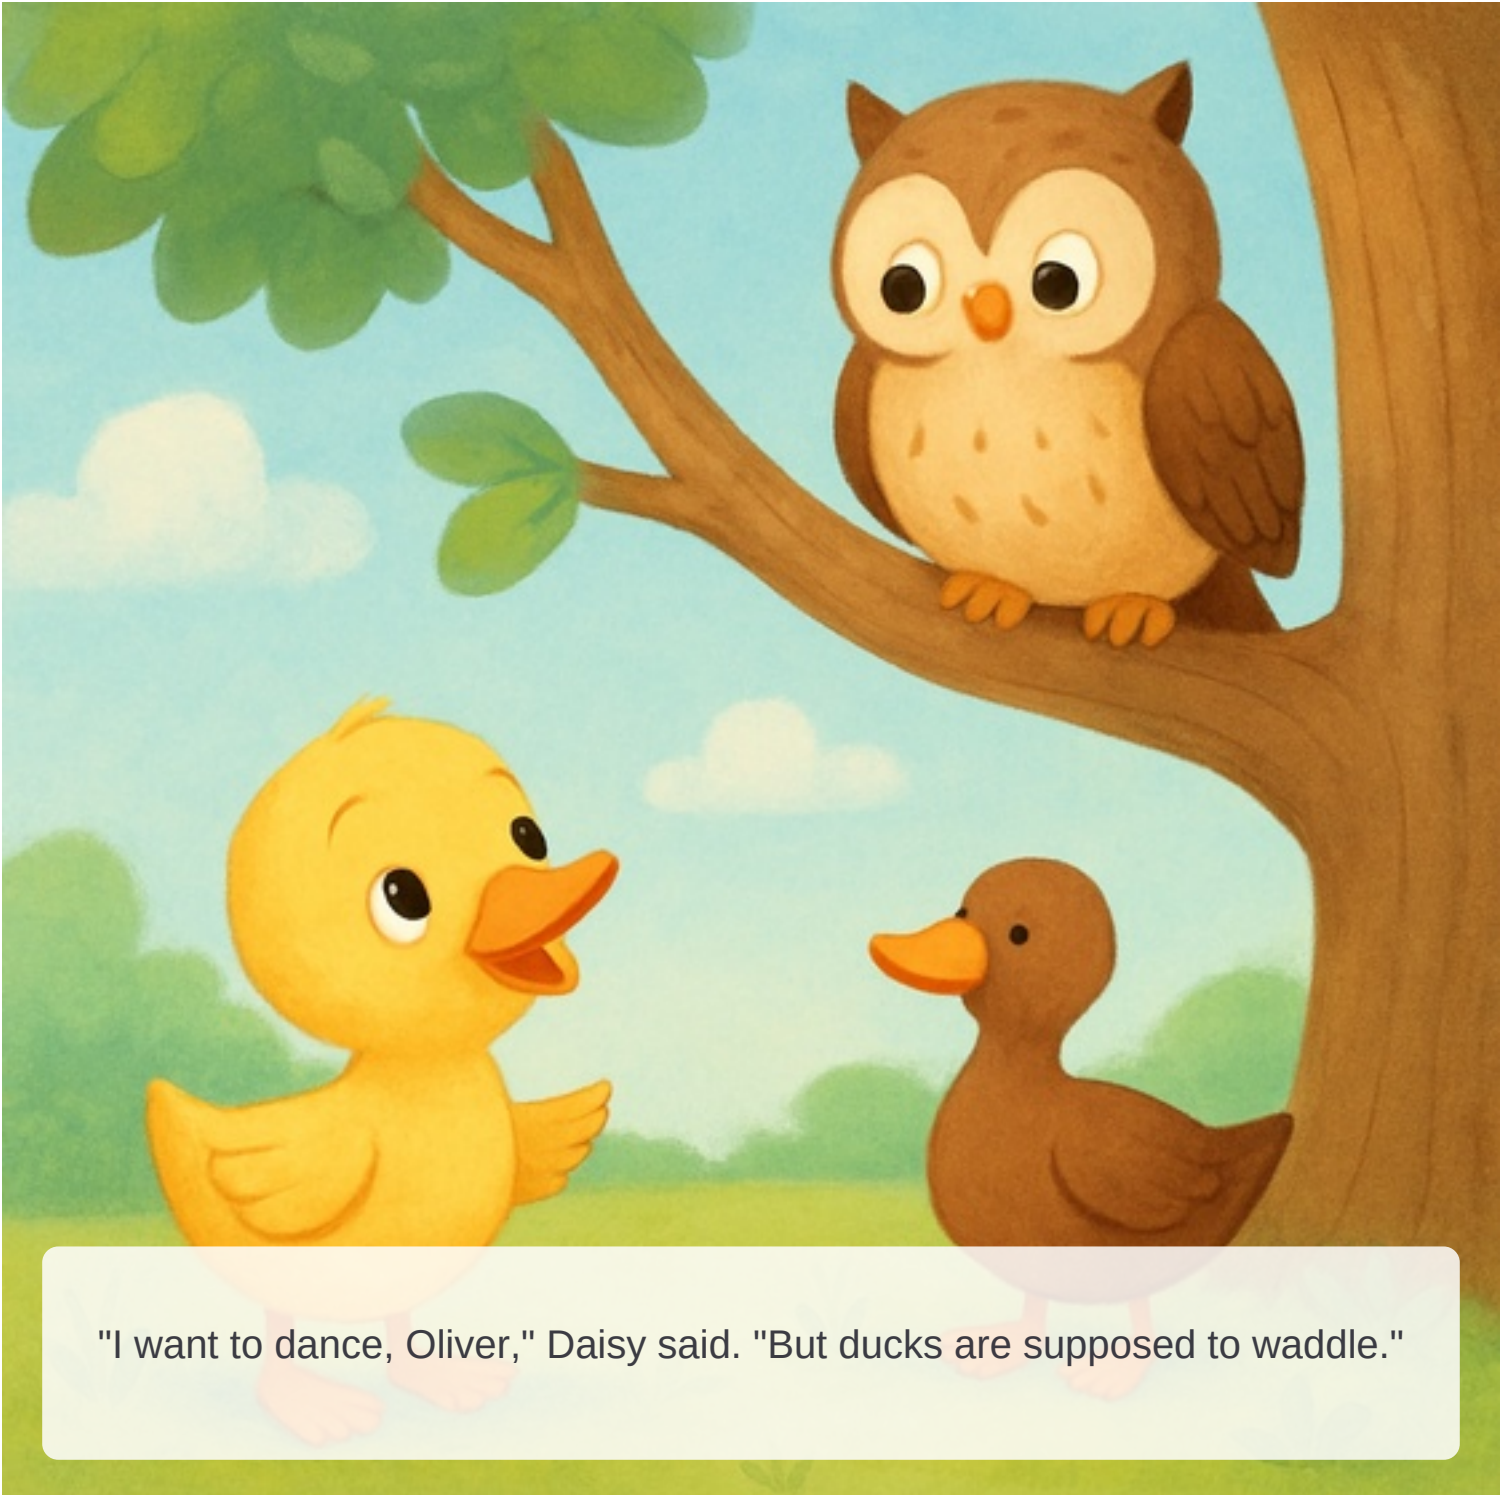

But it was very hard. Her feet felt like they were full of bouncy springs!

"I'm just not a good waddler," Daisy sighed. She sat under the old oak tree, feeling very droopy.

"Whoo-whoohoo is looking so sad?" asked a voice from above. It was Oliver the Owl.

"I want to dance, Oliver," Daisy said. "But ducks are supposed to waddle."

Oliver adjusted his glasses. "The pond is big enough for many rhythms, Daisy. Why hide your spark?"

Puddles arrived and sat next to Daisy. "I like your dancing," he whispered.
"It makes me want to wiggle!"

Just then, they heard a sound from the reeds. Ribbit-hop! Ribbit-rock!

Daisy looked at Oliver. She looked at Puddles. Then, she stood up and took a deep breath.

Daisy started slow. Shuffle, shuffle, flap!

Then she went fast! Spin, spin, leap! She was dancing like a golden sunbeam.

QUACK

Puddles couldn't help it. He started to wiggle his tail. Shake, shake, shake!

The other ducks came to see what the noise was about. They had never seen anything like it!

"Look at Daisy!" cried a duckling. "She's beautiful!"

Soon, the whole pond was moving. Some waddled to the beat, and some found a brand new dance.

Daisy led the way, dancing to her own rhythm. She was a duck, and she was a dancer, too!

DAISY THE DANCING DUCK

StorySprout Press