

The Little Cloud's Big Adventure

A StorySprout Press Book

Once upon a time, high above the hills, lived a little cloud named Cirrus.

Cirrus was fluffy. Cirrus was white. But most of all, Cirrus was curious.

"What is it like down there?" Cirrus wondered. "Can a little cloud like me help the world?"

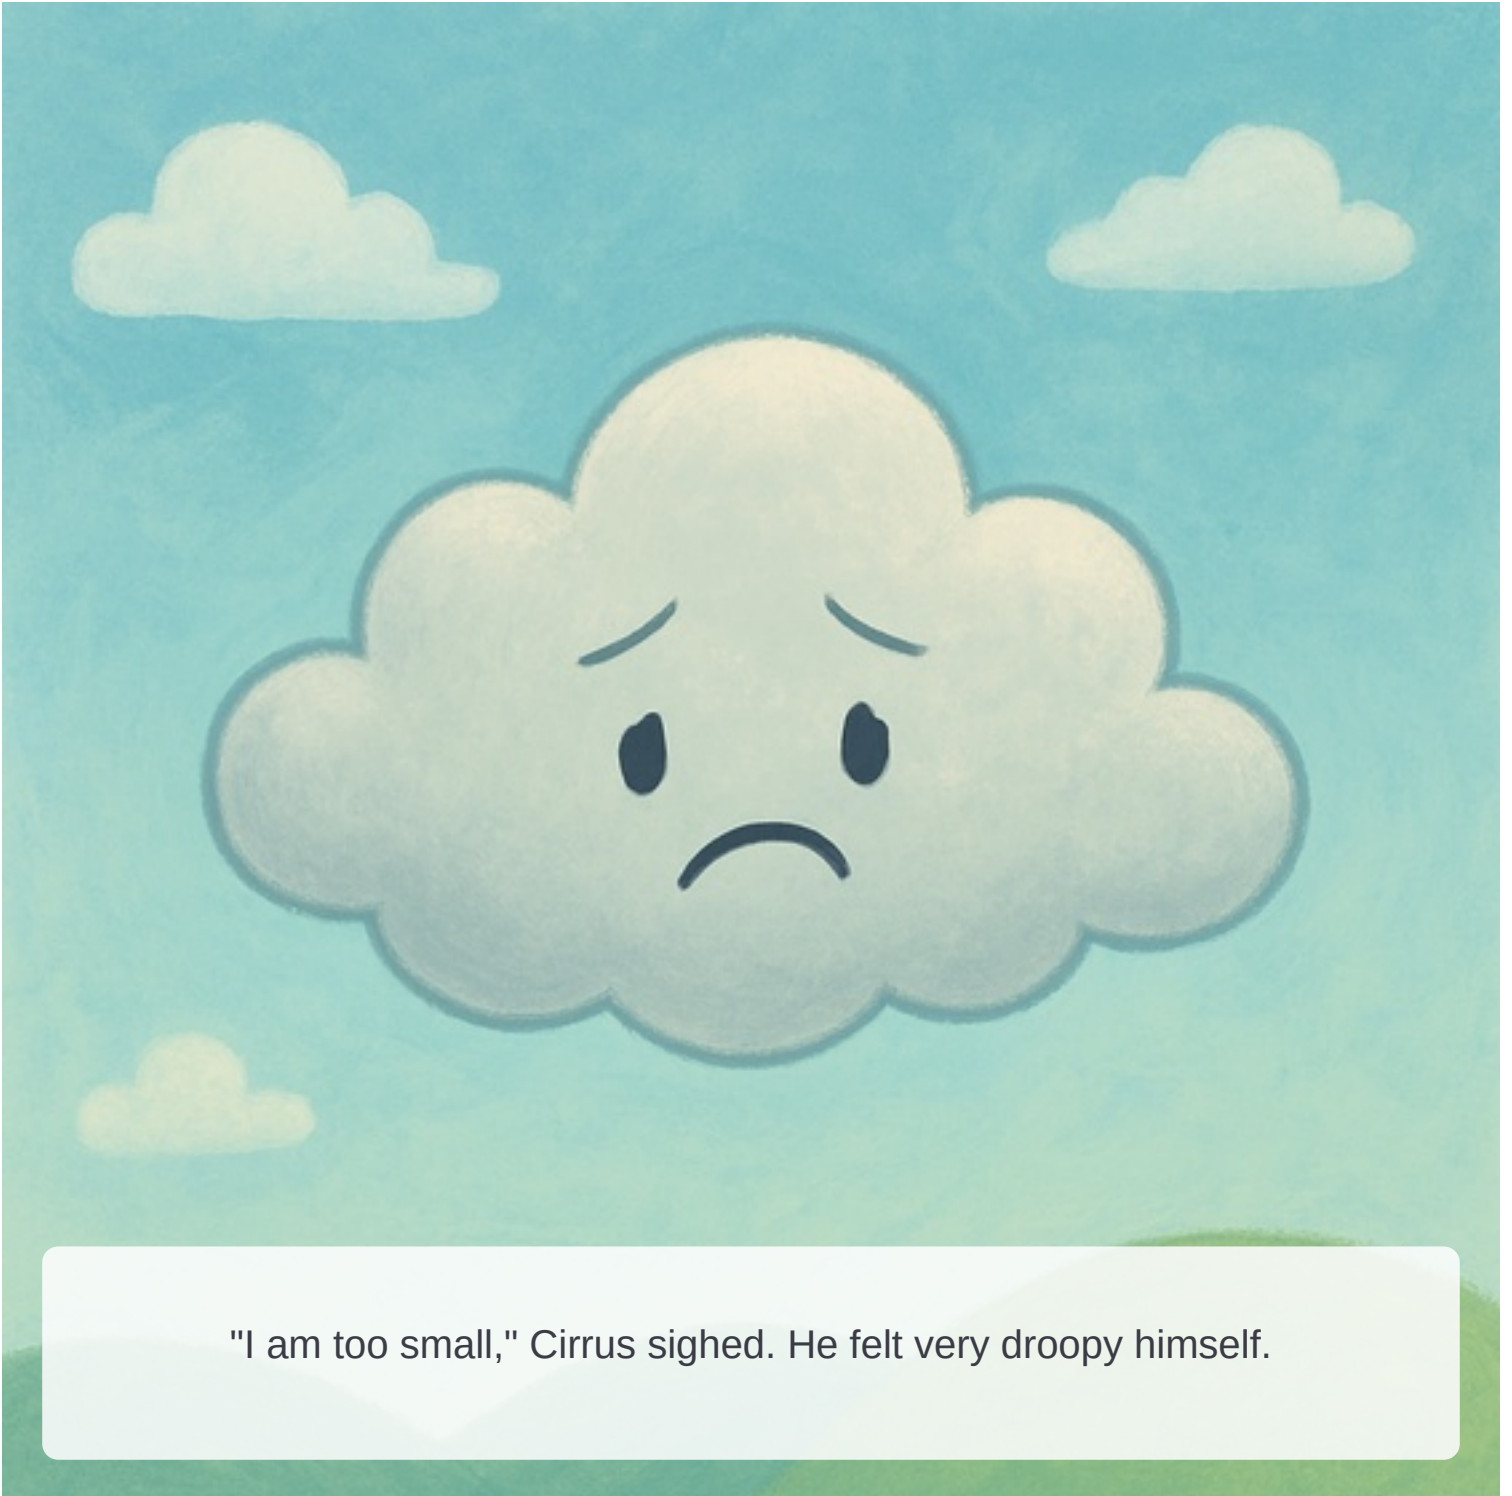

He saw a little garden where the flowers were drooping. They looked very thirsty.

Cirrus tried to squeeze out some rain. Squeeze! Squeeze! Squeeze!

"I am too small," Cirrus sighed. He felt very droopy himself.

"Don't be sad, Cirrus," said Sunny the Sun. "Everyone has a special job to do."

Just then, Gusty the Breeze whizzed by. "Want to see something cool?"
Gusty asked.

Gusty blew and Cirrus flew! They zipped over the hills and over the trees.

They stopped over a playground. The sun was very hot, and the children were tired.

Cirrus floated right in front of the sun. He made a big, cool shadow on the ground.

"Ooh, shade!" cried a little girl. "Thank you, little cloud!"

Cirrus beamed. He had helped! Providing shade was a very important job.

But Cirrus still wanted to make rain. He met his friend Drippy.

"To make rain, you must gather your friends," Drippy explained. "We work better together!"

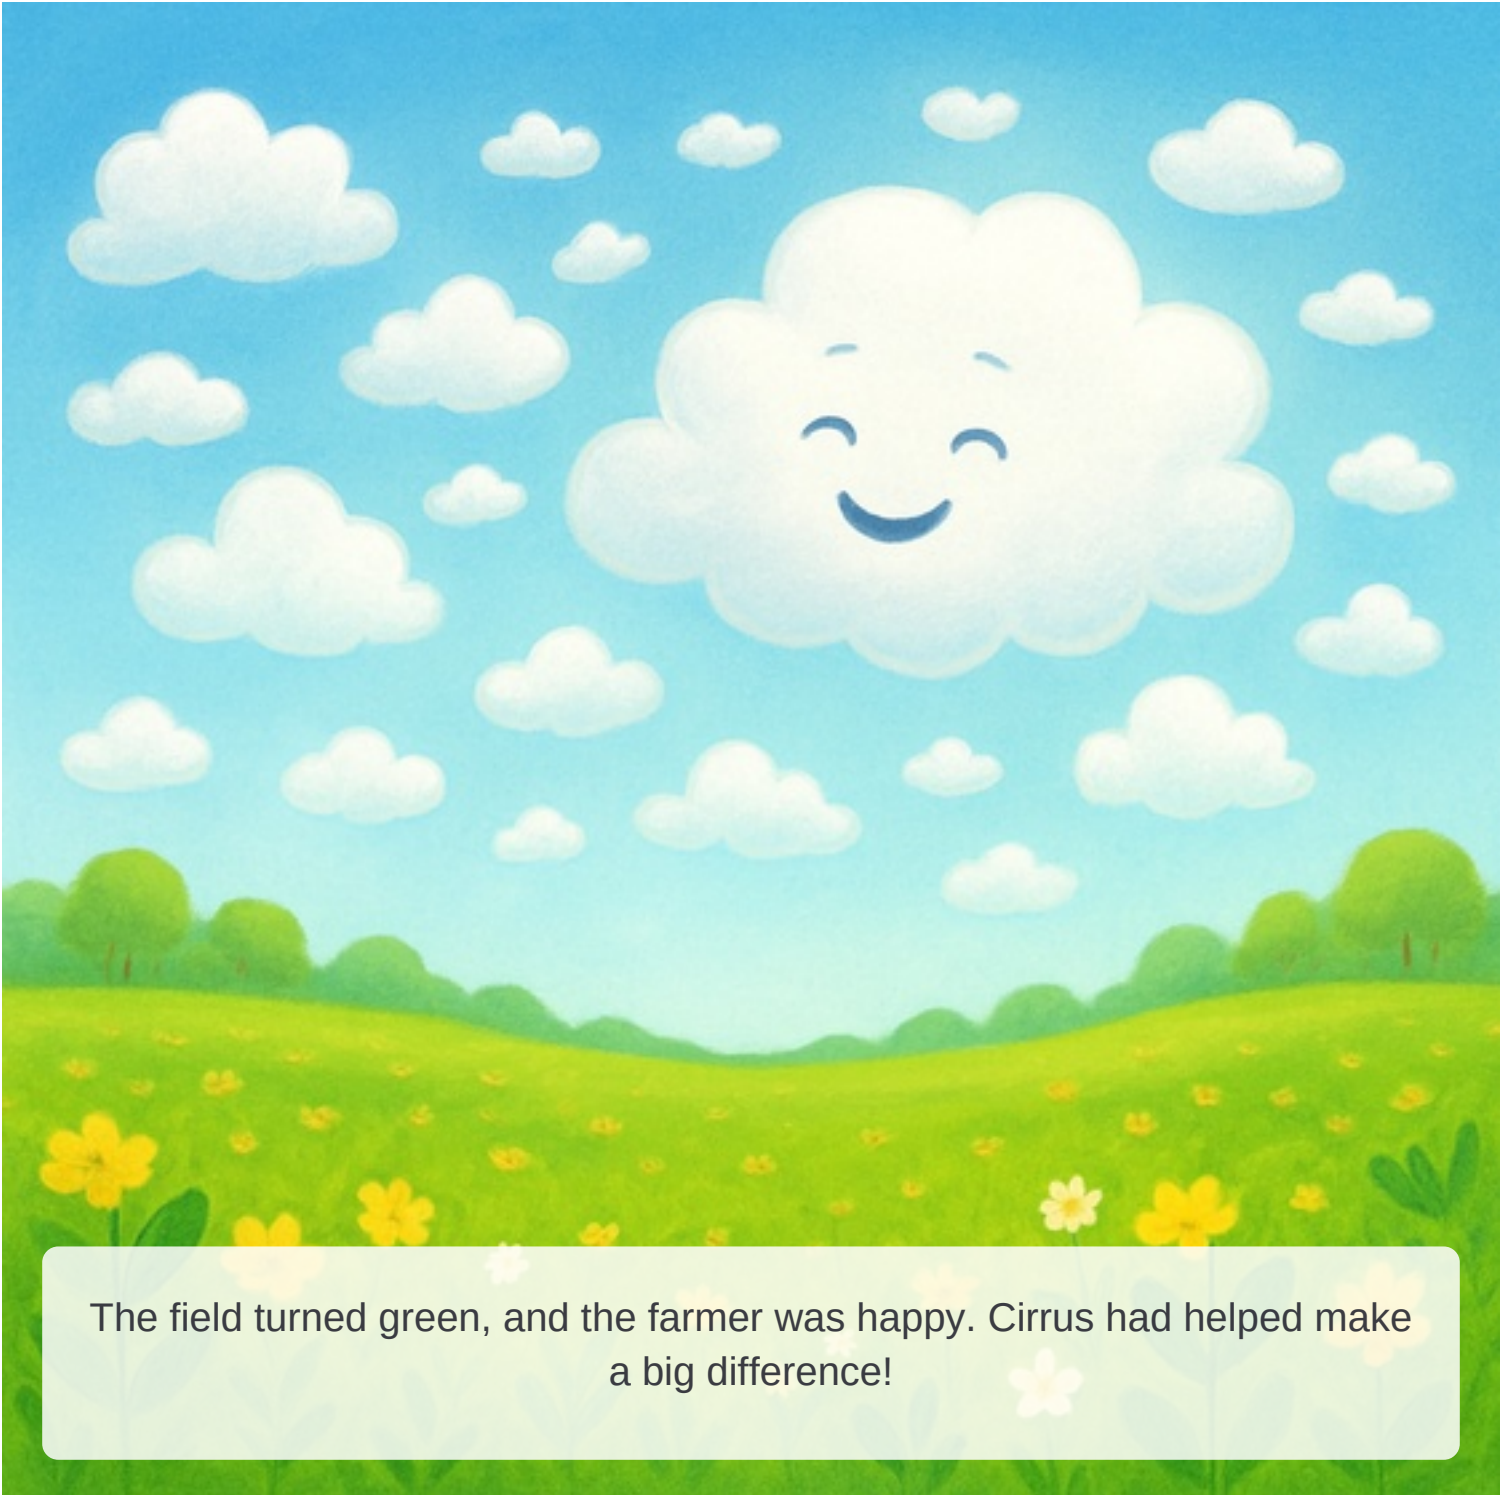

They floated over a big brown field where a farmer was waiting.

Cirrus, Drippy, and all their cloud friends huddle together. They grew bigger and darker.

Pitter-patter, pitter-patter! The rain began to fall.

The field turned green, and the farmer was happy. Cirrus had helped make a big difference!

As the rain stopped, a beautiful rainbow stretched across the sky.

Cirrus felt very special. He knew that even a little cloud could do big things.

That night, Cirrus turned a lovely shade of pink and orange as the sun went down.

The Little Cloud's Big Adventure

StorySprout Press